PREFACE

TODAY the Class Committee decided to give up our Reunion on account of the United States at last coming to her own and entering the Great War. Although we thus miss our "grand bust-out," I hope that we may all have this Report in our hands by June first. This will at least give us an opportunity to know what our classmates are doing, or rather were doing before they enlisted, for many have already volunteered.

I have endeavored to get a word from everyone. Therefore, as the Report had to go to print on April first, I had to make up a list of "Dilettantes and Unfaithfuls" at the very end of the book. When looking up a man, if you do not find him in the "Addresses and Occupations" turn to the back of the Report to the "Dilettante" column. Our whole Class is covered between these two lists. And let me hint here that it will be a great help to the Secretary not to have to make such a column in the next Report. Reply more promptly, please. It saves us both lots of trouble.

The Treasurer's Report shows the Class funds to be in good condition. Let us pray that they so continue. The Treasurer has also commented on our Class insurance fund, and has urged you to keep on with it. It is a good thing and a saver to the Class in the long run.

The pictures of our two Classmates whom the Great War has called are printed in this Report.

If you get married, let me hear from you. If you change your address or occupation, I want to know.

LEVERETT SALTONSTALL, Secretary.

TREASURER'S REPORT

To the Members of the Class of 1914:

Your Treasurer begs to submit the accompanying report of all receipts and expenses of Class money from January 1, 1914 to March 1, 1917. It will be noticed that the men who pledged money to the Class Fund in 1914 have been lax about making their payments, but special effort is now being directed towards them in hopes that they will do their share. This fund is particularly important as it is the only one from which running expenses can be derived, and as it ceases to be a source of revenue after June, 1919, we wish to have it as large as possible by that time.

The Treasurer of the Class Day Committee has turned over another $500 since the last report was issued, and has a substantial fund on hand which will be added to the Class Fund in the course of the present month.

Two bonds have been purchased which are bringing in a good return, while the deposit in the Massachusetts Trust Company is being left there where it can be reached quickly in case of emergency.

To say a word here regarding the Class insurance might not be out of place, — in the first place it must be understood that the money raised in this way is for a particular purpose, namely the $100,000 gift of the Class to the University on our Twenty-fifth Reunion. It was planned to have the dividends on the premiums available for the men to use for their reunion expenses, but unfortunately, through a legal oversight, this will not be possible at the triennial. The matter is being rectified, however, and the men who have taken out policies will soon receive papers to sign by which their future dividends may be applied yearly to reduce their premiums.

In case any one should decide not to continue his policy he should at least pay his first three premiums, for then his policy will have a definite cash value to the Class.

Respectfully,

Robert St. B. Boyd.

ADDISON LEACH BLISS

CLYDE FAIRBANKS MAXWELL

OBITUARIES

The sudden death of Addison Leach Bliss came as an overwhelming shock to the Class of 1914. On January 28, 1917, he sailed for France to join the American Ambulance Field Corps in which he had enlisted. After a stormy voyage he arrived in Paris, and there he caught a cold which quickly developed into pneumonia. He was taken to the American Hospital in Paris and there, on the twenty-second of February, 1917, he died. He was born in Springfield, Mass., on November 21, 1892. In 1900 he entered Fay School, and in 1904 he went to St. Mark's, Southboro, Mass., where he was captain of the ball team in his last year. In 1910 he entered Harvard and played on the victorious Freshman football team. After leaving Harvard he worked in Pittsburgh for the Ellsworth Collieries Co., and later for the Union Collieries Co. When the latter company was dissolved he enlisted in the American Ambulance Field Corps. There was no member of the Class of 1914 whose loss would be more deeply grieved than Addison Leach Bliss. His generosity, geniality, and wholeheartedness made him one of the most lovable men it is given us to know. The multitude of friends he has left who loved him so dearly will miss him always, and the place he filled in the hearts of all of us can never be refilled. In giving his life in the cause of the Red Cross, with which Harvard has become so closely allied, he has brought glory to his college, and especially to the Class to which he belonged. Deep as was the love which that Class bore him, so now is the pride which it feels in the great sacrifice he has made in the endeavor to relieve the sufferings of others.

William Bradford Browne, Jr., son of William Bradford and Mary Elizabeth (Roper) Browne, was born at Columbiana, Ala., March 17, 1893. He entered Harvard from the University of Alabama, registering as an Unclassified Student during 1910–11. The following year he became a regular member of our Class. He died at Columbiana, Ala., on Dec. 2, 1912, during the Junior year.

Arthur Louis Max Dejonge, son of Louis and Anna Dejonge, was born at Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., on November 25, 1892. He graduated from the Staten Island Academy in 1910, entering Harvard as a Freshman in September of the same year. He was an unusually intelligent and conscientious student, and having a lively disposition, he was very popular with the boys and was very active in school affairs. He began his college career looking forward with great pleasure and pride to spending four successful years there. As he said, when home for Christmas vacation: "It is wonderful to learn from such great professors." He soon made friends among his fellow students and wishing to devote some time to sport, he joined the rowing club. At the time of the mid-year examinations he had an attack of the grippe, but was able to finish his examinations. Going home to spend his vacation, he was taken ill with pneumonia, and in spite of making a brave fight for his life, he died on February 16, 1911.

Louis Jules Gordon was born at Boston, Mass., July 29, 1892. He prepared for college at Boston Latin School, entering with the Freshman Class, and receiving his degree in 1914. While at College he was a member of the Engineering Society, Menorah Society, and the Boston Latin School Club. After graduating he entered the insurance business, taking at the same time a course in accounts at the Boston Y. M. C. A. After a serious illness he died on February 12, 1915.

Clyde Fairbanks Maxwell, born April 14, 1892, of an English father and American mother, received his preliminary education at the Armidale School, New South Wales, where his father was Government Inspector of the sugar refineries. Because of his schooling in Australia, Clyde knew none of his classmates when he entered College. This lack he soon cured, however, by taking part in various activities; he played association football, the only game played at Harvard which he understood, rowed each year on dormitory or club crew, and was on the Board of the Illustrated Magazine. In his Junior year he became a member of the Western Club. In a scholastic way his work was of a high character; during the Sophomore and Senior years he held a Harvard College Scholarship, and he finished his course in three and a half years. Shortly after the outbreak of the war Clyde sailed for England to start training as an officer in the infantry. Just as he was about to leave for France as Lieutenant in the Twelfth Essex Infantry, he was forced to ask for sick leave, which lasted a year. During this time he became engaged to Miss Helen Bulpett, an English girl. In the early part of June, 1916, he rejoined his regiment in France. A few weeks later with it he entered the battle of the Somme. On July 3, at 3 A.M., the Twelfth Essex made an attack on the enemy. That night but 98 out of the 1100 men of the regiment answered the roll call. At 4.45 A.M. MAXWELL was reported "wounded in the face, but still organizing bombing attacks"; at 5.30 A.M. "very hard pressed but fighting on, doing splendid work, regardless of himself." That was the last ever heard of him. The dead were buried hastily at night. A wounded private proudly told his mother, "No prisoners were taken, not one: we fought to the finish." MAXWELL was a man of highest ideals, very modest and unassuming, with a sense of duty which would brook no shirking. Those whom he called friends were always warm friends, and these he never failed and never lost. His ready response to the call to arms and early death for the cause in which he believed stand as a symbol of that sacrifice to Duty which Harvard deems its most precious ideal.

FRANCIS PALFREY MOTLEY was born in Boston, Mass., on December 8, 1890. His early schooling was in Boston. Then, before entering Harvard in 1910, he attended school at Groton, Cloyne, and Milton. He stayed in College for three years, and then went into the banking business in Boston. He was thus occupied up to the time of his sad death on October 4, 1915. He was a wonderfully cheery soul, always with a glad smile and a good word for everyone. He had a tremendous heart. These qualities earned for him many friends, both at school and in college, who will never forget the good times they had in his company. Though never an athlete in the competitive way, he loved the outdoor life; he was a keen hunter and an experienced sailor. It is one of the hard ways of the world that such a man should be taken from it at so early an age.

Byerly Newton, born at Fort Eliott, Texas, on July 21, 1887, died at Montclair, N. J., on December 24, 1915. In his death 1914 has lost one of its truest members. Those of us who knew him at home as well as at school and College found him always the same — remarkably sympathetic, responsive, gentle, modest, of high ideals, and always set squarely to support the right as he saw it. At the Newell or the Weld Boat Club Byerly Newton's readiness to go into a dormitory or class crew and pull his heart out to send the boat along was an inspiration to many of us, for his was a slight and delicate body. From early childhood his body held back the accomplishments for which his spirit strove. Upon leaving College Newton continued his studies and, passing the New Jersey examinations, took up his profession, instructor in secondary schools. His illness made it impossible for him to accept a regular position. On Christmas Eve, 1915, he died, leaving in the hearts of those of us who knew him sorrow for our loss and thankfulness for his companionship and example.

In May, 1911, the College was shocked by the news that one of her students, Sherman Pratt Parsons, had been drowned, following the overturning of a rowing shell on the Charles River. That his death was tragic would in itself have brought the matter sharply before the undergraduate world, but in addition he was one of the most popular men in his class, a member of the Pi Eta Society, the Lambda Sigma Fraternity, and other College organizations. At the time of his death he was twenty years old, one of three living children of Howard H. and Aurora M. Parsons, residents for many years of Detroit, Mich. Sherman was born in Detroit, and his earlier education was completed there. He attended St. John's Military School for three years and had a year at the Hamilton Institute at Clinton. He entered Harvard in 1911, taking a special course in literature and the classics. His father is a well-known real estate dealer of Detroit, son of William M. Parsons, and a descendant of Cornet Joseph Parsons, the first of the name to come to America. On his mother's side he was a descendant of a long line of American pioneers and judicial heads. Although not a member of any team or athletic organization, he was keenly interested in all sports and, in fact, in all College activities of any nature. He was a member of the Congregational Church.

Lee Wade, 2d, was the first graduate member of the Class of 1914 to die, and in some ways was one of the most intellectual. If he could have lived and become interested in any one pursuit, it is more than likely that he would have been heard from in after life. He might have excelled in almost any of the callings that take endless application and concentrated, intensive study. Time was no object to him — armed with his stack-permit, he would spend days in the darkest and coldest part of the Library stacks (and not of Widener, but of old Gore Hall, than which nothing could be much more uncomfortable) looking up some technical question of mediæval fortification or method of writing Latin poetry, with as keen a zeal and as much thoroughness as an experienced student might have taken. Though he had written nothing for publication, and his reading and studies had so far been for the most part disjointed, the erudition he had already amassed when he graduated was simply amazing. He died less than a month after receiving his degree from Harvard, on July 13, 1914, at Chicago, Ill.

Meredyth Whitehouse, son of Francis Meredyth and Mary (Armour) Whitehouse, died at Watkins, N. Y., on April 10, 1916. He was born at Chicago, Ill., on March 10, 1891, and prepared for College at Westminster School, Simsbury, Conn., entering College as a Freshman in 1910.
